Death: Philosophy, Therapy, Medicine

The Clinician Meets Death: Psychological Perspectives on Being with the Dying

LeeAnn Bartolini

As clinicians we receive little formal education on being with the dying and even less on confronting our own mortality and working with our own personal and professional grief. The intersection between exploring our own mortality and our own grief and ultimately being more fully available to our patients is explored. Readings, exercises, and other recommendations for working with these issues are suggested.
